I graduated from Işık University, Department of Psychology. During my undergraduate education, I worked in institutions for disabled individuals and took part in volunteering activities for them. After my bachelor's degree, I worked as a psychologist in special education and rehabilitation centers and supported individuals with disabilities and their families. Meanwhile, I continued the Üsküdar University Clinical Psychology Master's Program. Besides preferring to work with children and individuals with disabilities, I continued to work on family and educational counseling, individual therapies, and child-adolescent studies. I gave various seminars in some private schools and kindergartens, on various platforms and studies of awareness. While I was working as a permanent staff member in special education and rehabilitation centers, I gave various lectures at the university as part time. I am currently working as a permanent instructor in the Child Development Program of Istanbul Kent University.
